

FED NAVIGATOR

Fed Navigator — Advisor Guide

Turning your workshop report into booked appointments

Your Fed Navigator dashboard isn't a stats page to admire — it's a warm-lead list. Every person in it raised their hand to attend a federal retirement workshop, and the report tells you who is closest to retiring, who is most engaged, and exactly what each person asked about. That's everything you need to reach out with a reason.

This guide walks you through what you're looking at and, more importantly, what to do after you have the report to book more appointments.

The 60-second read (do this first, every time)

When a new workshop report is ready, look at three things in this order:

1. "Retiring soon" panel — the people retiring within the next 6–12 months. These are your appointments this week. 2. "Requested cliff notes" panel — people who asked for the summary/materials. They literally asked you for something. Reply today. 3. The Q&A and chat — what people actually asked. This is your opening line for every call and email.

Everything else (attendance %, retention curve, ratings) tells you how the workshop performed. The three items above tell you who to call.

Advisor overview (your home page)

What you see	What it means	How to use it
Next workshop card(s)	Your upcoming session(s), with a live registrant count and a Download registrations button	Know your pipeline. Download the registrant list to prep outreach before the event.
Workshops / Total attendees / Average attendance	All-time totals across your sessions	Track your trend. Rising attendance % means your promotion + reminders are working.
Average rating	Average of each workshop's star rating	Your credibility signal. A 4.5 stars+ average is a great line in your follow-up: "attendees rated this 4.7 out of 5."

What you see	What it means	How to use it
Workshops table	Every session — click any row to open its full report	Your archive. Old workshops are still full of people who haven't retired yet.

The workshop report (click any workshop)

Section	What it tells you	The appointment angle
Attendance funnel	Registered -> attended -> stayed	Context for your numbers; not a call list by itself.
Retention curve	How many stayed minute-by-minute	People who stayed to the end are your hottest prospects — they sat through 2.5+ hours voluntarily.
Live attendees	Everyone who attended — click a name for their full profile	Your master list. The detail pop-up is where the gold is (see below).
Q&A	Every question asked, with who asked it	Personalize outreach: "You asked about survivor benefits — let's walk through your numbers."
Retiring soon	Attendees signaling retirement within 6–12 months	Tier-1 leads. Call first.
Requested cliff notes	People who asked for the summary/materials	High intent. They asked you for something — respond.
What attendees said	Their evaluation comments + ratings	Real quotes you can reference, and warm fuzzies that justify a call.

The attendee detail pop-up (click any name)

This is the single most useful screen for personalizing outreach. For one person it shows:

- Time in session — how long they stayed (longer = warmer)
- Chats — every message they typed, in their words
- Questions — what they asked
- Evaluation — their rating and comment, if they left one

Why it matters: You never have to make a cold "just following up" call again. You can open with their concern, in their words.

Who to contact first — the priority tiers

Don't work the list top-to-bottom. Work it by heat:

Tier 1 — Call within 48 hours

- Retiring within 6 months (the "Retiring soon" panel, labeled by date/month)
- Anyone who asked a personal, specific question ("my last day is in August — what about my FEHB?")

Tier 2 — Call this week

- Retiring within 6–12 months (including the "Possibly..." ones — tentative still means thinking about it)
- Cliff-notes requesters — fulfill the request, then offer a conversation

Tier 3 — Email this week, call next

- Stayed to the end of the workshop but gave no timeline
- Highly engaged — multiple chats or questions (they're processing, not just watching)

Tier 4 — Nurture

- Everyone else who attended. They're not cold — they showed up. Add them to your newsletter/drip.

Use the attendee pop-up to confirm heat before you dial: someone who stayed 10 minutes and said nothing is a different call than someone who stayed the whole time and asked three questions.

The post-report playbook

Step 1 — Same day: fulfill every explicit request

Anyone in "Requested cliff notes" asked you for something. Send it the same day, personally (not an autoresponder). That email is your opener:

"Hi [Name] — here are the cliff notes from yesterday's session as you requested. While I have you: a lot of folks had follow-up questions about their own numbers. If it'd help, I keep a few 20-minute slots open for workshop attendees — happy to grab one for you. [scheduling link]"

Step 2 — Within 48 hours: call your Tier-1 list

Open with their question (pull it from the Q&A or their attendee pop-up):

"Hi [Name], this is [Advisor] — I presented Thursday's federal retirement workshop. You asked about [survivor benefits / the FERS supplement / your TSP withdrawal options]. That's exactly the kind of thing that's easier to walk through with your actual numbers in front of us. Do you have 20 minutes this week?"

If no answer, leave a voicemail and follow with a text/email referencing the same question. (Texting only those who opted in — the registrant export flags this.)

Step 3 — This week: email Tier 2 & 3

Reference the workshop, the rating, and a relevant resource. Keep it short and make the ask explicit:

"Thanks for joining [date]'s workshop — attendees rated it [4.7] stars. You mentioned you're looking at retiring [next spring]. The window before you go is when the planning matters most. I'd like to put together a quick, no-obligation snapshot for you — when's good for a 20-minute call?"

Step 4 — Ongoing: work the back catalog

Open older workshops in the Workshops table. Someone who was "12 months out" six months ago is now 6 months out. Re-run that list quarterly — your past reports are a renewable pipeline.

Using the exports

Three download buttons turn the dashboard into something you can work in your CRM or phone:

- Export All (on a workshop report) — every attendee with all their details (contact, agency, age, opt-ins, every question they asked, attended Y/N). Drop it into your CRM and tag the Tier-1/2 people.
- Download registrations (on the Next workshop card) — the sign-up list for an upcoming session. Use it to pre-call or pre-email registrants and lift attendance.
- Download evaluations — the feedback/ratings. Mine the comments for testimonials and for the topics people want more of.

Tip: filter your CRM by agency (it's in the export). A batch of VA or USPS attendees lets you tailor one message about their specific benefit quirks and send it to a dozen people at once.

A simple weekly rhythm

When	Do
Day of report	Send cliff notes / fulfill requests. Skim Q&A for your talking points.

When	Do
Within 48 hrs	Call every Tier-1 (retiring ≤6 months + specific question). VM + text/email each.
By end of week	Email Tier 2 & 3. Add everyone to your nurture list.
Following week	Second touch on no-answers (new angle, new question of theirs).
Quarterly	Re-open past workshops; re-work anyone whose timeline has now arrived.

Most appointments come from the second and third touch, not the first — the dashboard gives you a fresh, honest reason to reach out each time (a different question they asked, a resource, their stated timeline).

Reading the health metrics (and improving them)

- Average attendance % — registered vs. who showed. Low? Tighten your reminder emails/texts and confirm the calendar invite. The Download registrations list is your reminder audience.
- Retention curve — a steep early drop means the opening didn't hook; a long tail means strong content. The people on the tail are your warmest leads.
- Average rating — your social proof. Quote it in outreach. Watch the comment themes for what to cover next time.

A few do's and don'ts

- Do lead with their words. The whole point of the report is that you never have to guess what they care about.
- Do move fast on the retiring-soon and cliff-notes lists — intent fades within days.
- Don't blast the same generic email to everyone; segment by tier and agency.
- Don't text anyone who didn't opt in (the export flags opt-in status).
- Do follow your firm's compliance rules on outreach, recordkeeping, and what you can say. This guide is about who and when to contact — what you advise is your call and your firm's.
